Politics made poeticBy DouginNCThis short treatise is written with beauty of word and carefulness of thought, from unprecedented experience and virgin love of country. Lyrical are these words, expansive yet poetic all the same. The actions suggested or implored beseech one country, under God, to realize the ambitions and potential inherent in an infant nation. How amazed would be Geo Washington, though saddened so greatly by the Civil War and politics of late, to see what has been wrought.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Support for the principles of Washington's Address should be required by all who serve in governing the USBy JakiHow does one review Washington? I cannot be comfortable with owning people, and I know he freed his slaves when he died, but I regret this horrible blot on his character, even as I am astounded by the wisdom of his thoughts on the future of America. I wish he'd seen and written on stepping back from the precipice on which we now find ourselves.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy Richard W. On September 17, 1796, George Washington announced that he would leave the presidency. His famous farewell address encapsulates a view of the Union, the Constitution, and good citizenship that is an important part of American political thought today.

From the Inside FlapGeorge Washington's famous address encapsulates a view of the Union, the Constitution, and good citizenship that is an important part of American political thought today.About the AuthorGeorge Washington was born in Virginia in 1732. As a young man, he learned the morals, manners, and knowledge necessary to become a Virginia gentleman. He was particularly interested in the military arts and western expansion. At the age of 16, he helped survey Shenandoah lands. At the age of 22, he was commissioned a lieutenant colonel and fought in the first battles of what became the French and Indian War. Unanimously elected as the first President of the United States, Washington served two terms before retiring to Mount Vernon. He passed away on December 14, 1799.
