Speaking together in Cuba in 1991, Mandela and Castro discuss the place in the history of Africa of Cuba and Angolas victory over the invading U.S.-backed South African army, and the resulting acceleration of the fight to bring down the racist apartheid system. Also available in: Spanish; Farsi

"The speeches are both tributes to the Cuban people for their internationalist aid to the anti-apartheid struggle and to the vanguard role of the African National Congress and, at the distance of almost two decades, Mandela's speech has shown great staying power." --Book News
