From The Arcadian Library : Ibn Baklarish's Book of Simples: Medical Remedies between Three Faiths in Twelfth-Century Spain (Studies in the Arcadian Library) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Ibn Baklarish's Book of Simples: Medical Remedies between Three Faiths in Twelfth-Century Spain (Studies in the Arcadian Library):

The Arcadian Library manuscript, which is the subject of this book, provides a snapshot of the intercultural dialogue that was taking place in medieval Spain where Muslims, Jews, and Christians were all involved in studying and disseminating medical knowledge. The manuscript itself is of the master work of the early twelfth-century Jewish physician, Ibn Baklarish and was written in A.D. 1130. It provides unique information about the state of medicine in medieval Spain at the time. This edited volume is completed by a collection of eight essays by an international team of experts on Ibn Baklarish and his work.

'A delightfully well-produced and informative volume. It serves as a paradigm for how such manuscripts should be brought to the attention of both the wider scholarly community and the general public.' --Medical History "In an age of mass-produced paperbacks, this volume with its beautiful dust jacket, elegant cloth binding and fine paper is also a reminder that the making of good books is a craft, and bearing that in mind the price is actually quite reasonable. It seems that a critical edition of Ibn Baklarish's Kitab al-Muta'ini, announced twice before and overdue, is now being seriously tackled." --Annals of Science About the Author Charles Burnett is Professor of the History of Islamic Influences in Europe, Warburg Institute, University of London and Fellow of the British Academy.
