outgrowth of a conference that took place at the Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in 2006. The essays are by scholars who are at the forefront of evangelical scholarship on Christian missions in general and its history in particular. These scholars include familiar names such as D.A. Carson, Timothy George, Erwin Lutzer, and Douglas Sweeney. The topics include such diverse subjects as "Protestant Missions in the Sixteenth Century" (Glenn Sunshine), "Evangelical Revival and the Missionary Awakening" (George), "Baptists and the Great Commission" (Thomas Nettles), "The Great Commission in Asia" (Richard Cook), and "Ongoing Imperative or World Mission" (Carson). As with many multi-author texts, some of these essays are more informative than are others, but all of them are well-written and contain information that will be of interest to those who have a desire to learn more about evangelicals and their role in world missions. I highly recommend this book to those interested in increasing their understanding of the topic.

Good book for use in the online courses of Liberty University in Lynchburg VA.

A unique book that focuses exclusively on the history of evangelical cross-cultural missions from the eighteenth century through today, The Great Commission will interest anyone who is passionate about the spreading of God's Word.
